

Every Executive Needs a Limit

The printable version is no longer supported and may have rendering errors. Please update your browser bookmarks and please use the default browser print function instead.

This is an opinion item.

Author(s) Erwin Chemerinsky

Source Slate

Date 8/18/2006

URL <http://www.slate.com/id/2147955>

Quote

“ The Bill of Rights is a constant reminder that the ends do not justify some means. Surely, there would be less crime and more safety if the police could search anyone's person or property, at any time, without a level of suspicion that meets the legal definition of probable cause. But a society that values privacy and dignity does not accord the police such authority, even when the objective is fighting terrorism.”

Add or change this opinion item's references

This item argues for the position Judge Taylor was right to rule program unconstitutional on the topic NSA warrantless surveillance controversy.

Retrieved from "https://discoursedb.org/w/index.php?title=Every_Executive_Needs_a_Limit&oldid=2472"

This page was last edited on August 22, 2006, at 13:28.

All text is available under the terms of the GNU Free Documentation License.