

Somehow, patting down disabled, elderly improves security

The printable version is no longer supported and may have rendering errors. Please update your browser bookmarks and please use the default browser print function instead.

This is an opinion item.

Author(s) John L. Smith

Source Las Vegas Review-Journal

Date November 21, 2010

URL <http://www.lvrj.com/news/somehow-patting-down-disabled-elderly-improves-security-109629939.html>

Quote

“ I suppose you can't be too careful with all the disabled freshman high school girl terrorist suspects wheeling around these days. Yeah, sure. Fact is, I'm all for airport security. Most TSA personnel we've encountered have been as sensitive as their jobs allow. We generally endure the security pat-downs that accompany her wheelchair use without much complaint. But at what point do the so-called experts stop harassing the disabled and elderly and start using good judgment when it comes to choosing whom to search?”

Add or change this opinion item's references

This item argues against the position New procedures are justified on the topic TSA airport screening procedures controversy.

This item argues for the position Profiling should be used instead on the topic TSA airport screening procedures controversy.

Retrieved from

"https://discoursedb.org/w/index.php?title=Somehow,_patting_down_disabled,_elderly_improves_security&oldid=13433"

This page was last edited on November 22, 2010, at 19:14.

All text is available under the terms of the GNU Free Documentation License.