The Case for a No-Fly Zone

The printable version is no longer supported and may have rendering errors. Please update your browser bookmarks and please use the default browser print function instead.

This is an opinion item.

Author(s)	Nicholas D. Kristof
Source	The New York Times
Date	March 9, 2011
URL	http://www.nytimes.com/2011/03/10/opinion/10kristof.html
Quote	“The secretary of defense, Robert Gates, has said that a no-fly zone would be “a big operation in a big country” and would begin with an attack on Libyan air defense systems. But General McPeak said that the no-fly zone would be imposed over those parts of the country that Col. Muammar el-Qaddafi doesn’t control. That may remove the need to take out air defense systems pre-emptively, he said. And, in any case, he noted that the United States operated a no-fly zone over Iraq for more than a decade without systematically eradicating all Iraqi air defense systems in that time.”

Add or change this opinion item's references

This item argues for the position United States should impose a no-fly zone on the topic 2011 Libyan uprising.

Retrieved from "https://discoursedb.org/w/index.php?title=The_Case_for_a_No-Fly_Zone&oldid=14136"

This page was last edited on March 13, 2011, at 18:05.

All text is available under the terms of the GNU Free Documentation License.