

The FCC plans to spray, squash and flush its net neutrality rules down the toilet for good measure

The printable version is no longer supported and may have rendering errors. Please update your browser bookmarks and please use the default browser print function instead.

This is an opinion item.

Author(s) Los Angeles Times editorial board

Source Los Angeles Times

Date November 22, 2017

URL <http://www.latimes.com/opinion/editorials/la-ed-net-neutrality-rules-abandoned-20171122-story.html>

Quote

“ Pai seems particularly keen on paid prioritization, arguing that it could lead to new services — for example, online health monitoring — while generating revenue that could lower the price of broadband access. But it’s naive at best to expect broadband providers that face little or no competition to lower prices as revenue goes up. And the current rules don’t block the sort of data prioritization that sensitive health services might need — they simply prohibit broadband providers from charging fees in exchange for bestowing a competitive advantage. ”

Add or change this opinion item's references

This item argues against the position Net neutrality should be repealed on the topic Net neutrality in the United States.

Retrieved from

"https://discoursedb.org/w/index.php?title=The_FCC_plans_to_spray,_squash_and_flush_its_net_neutrality_rules_down_the_toilet_for_good_measure&oldid=29464"

This page was last edited on December 25, 2017, at 12:12.

All text is available under the terms of the GNU Free Documentation License.