Why the Ukraine Crisis Is the West's Fault

The printable version is no longer supported and may have rendering errors. Please update your browser bookmarks and please use the default browser print function instead.

This is an opinion item.

Author(s) John J. Mearsheimer

Source Foreign Affairs

Date September 1, 2014

URL http://www.foreignaffairs.com/articles/141769/john-j-mearsheimer/why-the-ukraine-crisis-is-the-wests-fault

The United States and its European allies share most of the responsibility for the crisis. The taproot of the trouble is NATO enlargement, the central element of a larger strategy to move Ukraine out of Russia's orbit and integrate it into the West. At the same time, the EU's expansion eastward and the West's backing of the pro-democracy movement in Ukraine -- beginning with the Orange Revolution in 2004 -- were critical elements, too. Since the mid-1990s, Russian leaders have adamantly opposed NATO enlargement, and in recent years, they have made it clear that they would not stand by while their strategically important neighbor turned into a Western bastion. For Putin, the illegal overthrow of Ukraine's democratically elected and pro-Russian president -- which he rightly labeled a "coup" -- was the final straw. He responded by taking Crimea, a peninsula he feared would host a NATO naval base, and working to destabilize Ukraine until it abandoned its efforts to join the West.

Quote

Add or change this opinion item's references

This item takes a mixed stance on the position 2014 Russian military intervention in Ukraine / Neutral Ukraine as a solution to the crisis on the topic 2014 Russian military intervention in Ukraine.

Retrieved from

"https://discoursedb.org/w/index.php?title=Why the Ukraine Crisis Is the West's Fault&oldid=17855"

This page was last edited on September 4, 2014, at 15:07.

All text is available under the terms of the GNU Free Documentation License.

"